

One dies flatly on National Public Radio.

They say your poems or sing your lyrics, praise your acting or whatever art, barely mentioning you've swandived from a ledge or dashed drunk into infernal traffic.

(At any rate, a something terribly past middle class limits.)